Nature of Organization

The Phillips lab is involved in neuroscience research. We are interested in the neurobiological underpinnings of learning, motivation, and drug addiction. We use a neurophysiological technique to measure dopamine release in behaving animals.

Duties and Responsibilities

Assisting in behavioral experiments, electrode fabrication, media prep, histology, maintain lab supply inventory, washing glassware, and basic animal care.

Minimum Qualifications

Must be willing to work with rats. Basic coursework in chemistry/biology desired but not required.

Educational Benefits

By joining this lab, you will have the opportunity to build a skill set that incorporates the use of both behavioral and state of the art neurophysiological techniques to assess learning, motivation and drug addiction. You will also gain experience working in a dynamic research environment.
