

Top 10 Questions to Ask Yourself Before You Decide to Go to Law School

As heard by Peg Cheng, UW Pre-Law Adviser, in a presentation given by Edward Tom, Director of Admissions, UC Berkeley School of Law
May 3, 2007

- 1. Are you an opinionated person?
Can you articulate it in writing and in speech? Can you articulate the other side with equal fervor?
- 2. Do you care?
Are you part of the 1% of the population that cares and wants to do something about it?
- 3. Are you a bit of a ham?
Do you like to talk up in class and get into it?
- 4. Are you an organized, detail-oriented person?
Lawyers need to read the fine print. Berkeley embeds secret things in their applications. You have to read the instructions!
- 5. Do you read the Voter's Pamphlet?
Those are laws!
- 6. Do you know your strengths and weaknesses?
- 7. Do you have a good handle on your EGO?
If you are told fifteen times a day that you're wrong, can you still feel good about yourself at the end of the day? If you can't handle the process, don't come to law school.
- 8. Are you okay with ambiguity?
 $2+2=4$, but what if $2+2=6$? There are a lot of gray areas in law.
- 9. After all these years, do you still like school?
Do you still like to read and write papers?

"I care about spelling errors. We are not here to correct your personal statement."
- 10. Do you have any unfinished business in your life?
Travel dreams? Need to get away from school? Want to work for a while? Need to help out your family? Take care of unfinished business before you go to law school. You can't get off this train for a long time.
